ABOUT ME

Glori Pacheco

Glori is a Costa Rican pop singer-songwriter who blends emotional pop, Y2K nostalgia, and cinematic storytelling. With a background in Dramatic Arts, Audiovisual Production, and Photography, she has built an artistic universe where music, visuals, and live performance come together to tell stories of love, grief, friendship, and personal rebuilding. Her debut album, Capituloves, brings together songs inspired by emotional experiences spanning adolescence through young adulthood.

ARTIST DEVELOPMENT & SONGWRITING

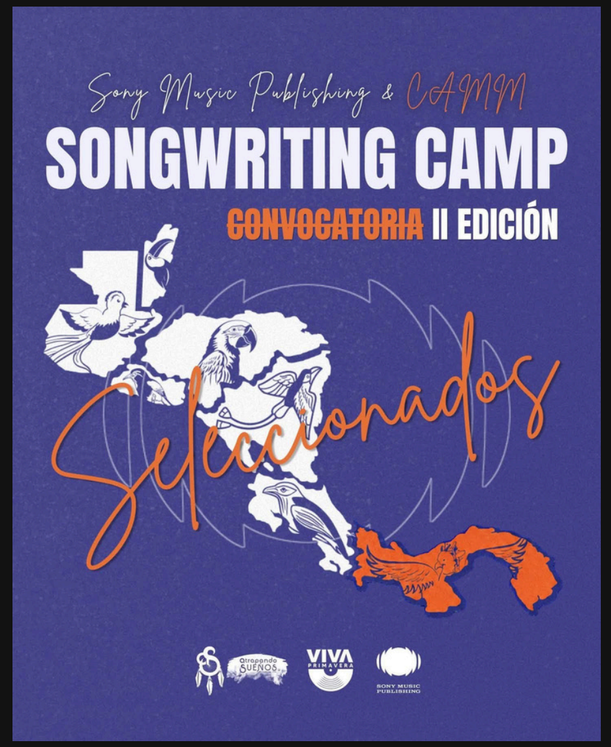

Glori was selected to take part in CO-LAB de Autoras 2026, a six-month intensive program developed by We Could Be Music with support from the 2026 Puntos de Cultura Fund of Costa Rica’s Ministry of Culture and Youth. The initiative brings together 15 songwriters selected from more than 100 applicants and focuses on songwriting, toplining, hook development, collaborative writing, demo creation, and professional co-writing practices.

In August 2026, she was selected to participate in a Sony Music Publishing songwriting camp in Panama, where she took part in a collaborative writing session alongside artists and producers from across the region, further strengthening her experience in creative processes within the professional dynamics of the Latin American music industry.

That same year, she was selected as a winner of a music production training program by We Make Noise, expanding her creative and technical skills and enabling her to take a more active role in shaping the sonic development of her own music.

Held at London Room and co-produced with Nueva Ola, the event received support from Costa Rican music industry organizations such as ACAM and AIE.
